Why hold this conference?

There are many challenges facing people as they approach end of life decisions. Health professionals and carers also encounter many ethical dilemmas in providing the best care possible for their patients nearing the end of their lives. Patients have their own religious faith, spirituality or basic human conceptual framework. Their deeper outlook on life does impact on their health decisions. The more health professionals and carers understand their patients' spirituality, the better their caring service for them will be.

Who could benefit from this conference?

All carers, nurses, managers and other health professionals engaged in aged care or in chronic illness in institutions or in the home, acute care in hospitals or palliative care settings or in emergency care departments. This conference will also be of interest to pastoral practitioners, chaplains, members of the Human Services and Aged and Community Care departments, and staff of community health centres.
